

ABSTRACT

A system for actively displaying moving images on a container sidewall, which comprises a display unit, control unit, and power unit. The system is secured within the interior of the container, while the display screen is flush with the container sidewall so that the outer 5 shape and other characteristics of the container resemble a regular container. The control system may be used to allow automatic control or manual control of the underlying system.